Title: What will you pray for today?

Author:

When grandma died and grandpa came to live with us I was afraid the others in the family would resent the intrusion and extra trouble. To my surprise grandpa's presence changed our home in ways I never expected.

Normally when we came home from a day at work or school each member of the family would find something different to do, watch TV, housework, homework, play outside, etc. The first afternoon grandpa was there he stopped he stopped each person at the door and asked a question before the person could get involved in anything else. His question was simple yet profound, "What did you pray for today?"

The first few days the answers were short and kind of fragmented. Then, in anticipation of grandpa's question, the answers became deeper and longer as he got involved in each one's personal life, encouraging a closer walk with God. When grandpa died a strange thing happened. We started asking each other this one question every day!
